In "The Second Plane, Martin Amis has produced an excellent book. It is a collection of his journalism since the events of 11 September 2001. The collection is coherent, well researched and a compelling read. Amis has no sympathy for the barbarians of the Islamic world. In many respects, he is close to the views of his colleague, Christopher Hitchens.

For those thousands in the South Tower, the second plane meant the end of everything. For us, its glint was the worldflash of a coming future. Terrorism is political communication by other means. The message of September 11 ran as follows: America, it is time you learned how implacably you are hated.

The Second Plane is Amis's bid to join the folks who write about what's going on. These twelve essays and reviews and two short stories, published between September 18, 2001 and September 11, 2007 — the sixth anniversary of the terror attacks — collectively establish Amis's chosen position: that of an atheist and rationalist appalled by the "institutionalized irrationalism" of religion in general and Islamism in particular.
